Customer Reviews

What started out as a good engrossing read, became bogged down with endless name tags, passive sentences, character stories that didn't add to the work and a major chronological problem. Con's I don't know how many times we are told who's talking when it's only two people. Detrick 700 times. Leah 404. The majority of the sentences were supposed to be active, yet the insertion of "had" made them passive. 800 uses. I'm confused on why we are told of the life Dorothy Silver settled on in the United States. What is its relevance? Was her career in the United States a cause of Hitler coming to power? It was. But why was it so detailed? It didn't add a thing to what was going on in Germany. The big chronology problem occurred when one of the characters Kurt is meeting with the Polish Resistance. During the meeting it is stated Kristallnacht, November 9-10, 1938 occurred one year ago. If that's the case, then Poland would have already been attacked and defeated. When writing historical fiction one must get all the dates correct. Chronology confusion: As the story moves forward, the timeline doesn't. I found myself scratching my head attempting to understand what year all the events were occurring. Readers shouldn't have to guess when the story is taking place. The writing style is definitely YA material. Everyone of the characters is weeping or crying or gnashing with grief. They came across as soft and underdeveloped. And finally, the grammar at times could not be overlooked. EX: Page 8, location 121 inhaling the essence; then she kissed the top of his golden hair. A semicolon is not required unless the word "then" is deleted. Page 50, location 901 The word used is decedent. It should be decadent.
