All At Sea: Finding Sweet Love Book 1 (Finding Sweet Love Series)

Synopsis

Romance. Sizzle. Intrigue. A whale watching cruise, gone wrong, throws two strangers together for an exciting adventure! Jenna Michaels has spent the last two years wrapped up in writing her three best-selling novels. She's quit her job and is now a full-time writer. Then the unthinkable happens. The words just dry up. Hell-bent on finding inspiration for her fourth novel, Jenna throws herself out into the world to rediscover her writing talent. She needs the words to fly from her fingers again. Ryan Price is attempting to extricate himself from his ex-girlfriend who refuses to let go. He's not happy to discover she's been in contact with his mother behind his back. To an outsider on this beautiful day, he seems grumpy and aloof. When Jenna and Ryan meet aboard the Ulysses III there is instant sizzle. Being surrounded by a boatload of strangers can't cool their attraction and it's hands-on all the way. Their fascination with one another quickly becomes a desperate struggle for survival when disaster and tragedy strike in the blink of an eye. Between some sticky family influences and a tragic turn of events, can they survive their need to be together? Does romance on the beach equal love in the real world? Will the tragedy that follows their first meeting drive them together or pull them apart? All At Sea is the first published fiction novel for non-fiction writer Tracey Pedersen. She promises you a fun read with enough twists to keep you interested. Best of all, you'll never suffer through a cliffhanger ending in one of her stories! I'm a sucker for any story set at sea, and if it's a sea survival story it goes to the top of my reading list, regardless of genre. This story doesn't take place immediately on the cruise, we're first introduced to the main female character, Jenna, at her apartment and I immediately found her not at all appealing. She's spending her time trying to avoid and snub a smitten neighbor she callously used, in a one-night stand, to try and jumpstart her writer's block. First impressions matter, and I'm afraid I never really liked her after this introduction. The cruise part of the story was interesting without being too exciting. We meet the male protagonist, Ryan, who is a fairly generic romance hero who has a manipulative ex-fiancee in tow causing troubles, and a nice, if a bit scatty, mother with him. Then the catamaran they're on sinks (a bit unbelievably), there's a neat scene with Jenna and a blithely murderous whale, and some realistically emotional and harrowing moments when she can't (fortuitously for the romance aspect) rescue anyone but Ryan in her dinghy. I was impressed with how long the author allowed Jenna to be on her own while Ryan is unconscious. It's up to her to sight land, pull the dinghy up the beach, protect him from the sun, explore the deserted island looking for help, food, and water. That was the best part of the book, in my opinion, and it was well done. The debris from the wreck carried by the same current that brought them ashore was accurate and a bit humorous. The loneliness is well-captured and I started to warm up to Jenna a bit. Then Ryan wakes up and it's straightforward hanky-panky on the beach (nothing explicit), all else well lost for love.
