Customer Reviews

This is the fourth book in the "Rockstar Romance - Private Love" series by Toni Kenyon and I can say that, in general, it has made a very good impression on me. I write this review as soon as I've read the book in order to be able to remember the details. The story's protagonist, Julian, is at the peak of his career, he has left behind the madness the publicity is accompanied with and is now trying to mature, to become a better person, a model father and partner. Generally, people who manage to overcome their selfishness and who want every day to get better in every aspect of their lives is something rare and to find said attributes in a famous musician ... even rarer. In the first book, our hero had characteristics of a diva musician; he was demanding, was looking to be the center of attention and liked to test the limits. Not anymore, though. In the first book we saw his struggle to win the love of the woman he loves, in the second we got a glimpse of one of the many crazy experiences that apparently he has lived in the many years he had been in the music and performing industry, in the third book we saw how he began to mature and to learn to live a relaxed, family life and in the fourth book we see how he struggles to combine his three loves: music, performing and his family. Mags, our protagonist's woman, has been presented, from the beginning, as a pragmatic, mature, talented, smart and down to earth woman who is the only person that can calm Julian and make him see reason. She is a woman quite dynamic, passionate and admirable. It is successfully depicted in the story how extremely difficult for a woman is to combine motherhood with life on the road, touring.
