Customer Reviews

Grace and Disgrace by Kayne Milhomme - A Review by HM Flath
After 20 years the three trusted friends and partners from their college Sleuthound Club days, come together in Boston to untangle a mystery surrounding the disappearance of the Templar Diamond which occurred approximately six years ago. The invitation to partake in the search received by Jack Tuohay leads to untangling mysterious murders, lies and deceptions, secrets of the past and personal vendettas. The primary character Jack Tuohay, super sleuth of the Royal Irish Constabulary and liaison with Scotland Yard, is the sole member of the trio who continued with his sleuthing work as a career. He is indeed the Sherlock Holmes or the Inspector Clouseau complete with his trench coat, an undetermined lung ailment, a limp and a silver tipped walking cane who provides leadership and the insights in solving the mystery. John Eldredge a true statistician and a master of numbers, moved into government work generating population and agriculture statistics, writing telegram and pocket codexes. His role became one of searching out information, studying and deciphering codes and helping Tuohay wherever and whenever he could. Eliza Wilding's career became colorful, tied to the arts and stage. She brightened up the trio with her quick wit, her impeccable observation skills and her catching appearance along with her ability to take on any task required, including the tough physical ones. All three of the super sleuth characters are strong and likeable, carefully crafted and consistent throughout the story. The reader is plunged immediately into the story in the very beginning chapter with the initial mysterious meeting. I was caught and from there was motivated to read on!
