Alex Ferris worked for the CIA, but he left that business to take on the job of being an International Private Investigator. But that job isn't working out the best for him. He struggles to earn enough money to make life pleasant. But all that changes one day. He receives a phone call that his twin brother needs his help. He flies to San Francisco to see what the problem is and finds his brother dead in his apartment from an apparent self inflicted gunshot to the head. Alex doesn't buy it though. His brother is not the type to commit suicide even when things are going poorly. But the evidence is against him. But Alex decides to investigate. What he digs up is an international disaster waiting to happen. It appears that a small group within the Soviet Union is doing their best to build an Economic Empire by stealing Intellectual property from U.S. companies and taking it to Russia where they plan to one up the U.S. and present the world with cutting edge patent's that will bring Economic Success to Russia. To do this though there is plenty murder, intrigue, cold war strategy, poison pills that cause people to turn on their own government and way of life and in the long run a plot to assassinate Mikhail Gorbachev so that General Vasily Karpov can become the new President of Russia and make millions of dollars and propel Russia to the top of the World's Economic charts. Can Alex Ferris, ex-CIA, be the power that will bring all of this to the world's attention and rip apart a plan that is monstrous? From San Francisco to Moscow to Siberia the chase will be amazing, the acts of heroism unbelievable and the eventual outcome not assured at all until the last page is turned.
